THE SECRETARY OF WAR

A Republican correspondent, who insists stoutly upon the "liberty of speech," writes us a letter for publication, from which we make

"Your articles in defence of Secretary Stanton have been copied by other papers, and have contributed essentially, from the ability with which they were written, and the locality of their publication, to sustain him in his present position. I, therefore, hold that it is a duty which you owe to the Republican party, and to your patrons, to permit the expression through your columns of the opinion entertained by many well-informed supporters of the Administration, that he is to a large extent, if not wholly, responsible for the disasters which have recently overtaken the Union cause!

I propose, in a series of communications, to show that Mr. Stanton has done business politically, since he has been in office, wholly upon borrowed capital, vir: the credit arising from the Union victories, which followed the advance of the Federal armice has winter, which he order-rowed capital, viz: the creditarising from the Union victories, which followed the advance of the Federal armies last winter, which he ordered with such a flourish of trumpets. Doubtless, it was a meritorious act to start the Union armies from their then terrible repose; but liss it was a meritorious act to start the Union armies from their then terrible repose; but liss merit is considerably diminished by the reflection that they were on the eve of moving, cren without the inspiring order of Secretary Stanton. That order was simply an interference with the execution of millitary plans, and afforded the present, if not the valid exense, which has served the purpose of certain generals ever since, and which has been turned to such fearful account in the recent elections by the demagogues opposed to the war.

It is the duty of a Secretary of War to provide the men and the means to conduct military operations; not himself to direct them. This duty belongs to the Commander-in-chief and to his subalterns in the field. The mighty armament, therefore, which Secretary Stanton precipitated against the South in February last was the creation of his predecessor, and to the latter is due whatever credit belongs to the War Department for the victories which followed the savance of our armies on this occasion. It was no idle boast of Secretary Cameron, that he had placed in the field, upon the shortest notice, the largest and best appointed army which the world ever saw.

It was not till Secretary Stanton was required.

placed in the trans-the largest and best appointed army which as-world ever saw.

It was not till Secretary Stauton was required to sustois the superior force and material of the Union armies which Secretary Cameron had organized, that he began to be responsible for results, and to be entitled to credit or censure, and it was precisely at this time that the dis-saters of the war commenced."

If Gen. Cameron is entitled to credit for organizing a half million of men, certainly Sec-retary Stanton is not entitled to less credit for organizing twice as many in less time.

That the army, last winter, was already "on the eve of moving," when the President's or-Secretary Stanton, were given, is, at best, a gratuitous conjecture. What we know is, that it was with the greatest difficulty that they were made to move, even under the President's or-ders. A council of generals was gotten up here early in March, and voted, eight to four that it was "impossible" to move into Virginia before the fire day of April.

As to disasters in the field, it is the generals who are primarily responsible for them. Up-, the Secretary of War may be so also, if it is by his influence and advice that incompetent generals are selected, or continued in command. It will be time enough to answer any charge of that kind, against Secretary

Twist," on Tuesday evening, at this theatre, was a signal triumph of the powerful stock and star company of this establisement, and the framatic amusement their enterprise and taste is furnishing, the conspicuous success they are gathering. Miss Lucille Western, in Nancy Sykes, is one of the very best impersonations of this remarkably versatile and gifted actress. We know that her Madam Vine was a triumph which bore away the highest laurels, and we unite with multitudes in wishing to see her in the indictment against Secretary Stanton, if it again during this engagement. Her excel-anything so shadowy can be said to have sub-lent sense and manifest aspirations in her profession, will, however, permit and even thank us for a single, it may be, useful suggestion in connection with this latter named character. We think her soliloquies, and they are many and extremely difficult in that part, may be improved. We thought them inclined to monot ny and rather too much in the manner of an address to the audience. In every thing else she was finished, and in that tragic and terrible death-bed scene, when the wife and the mother out of the depths" rises to her empire, and in the presence of her noble wronged and forgiving husband, sinks to her long rest, with her hands and her blessings upon the heads of her long-lost children, is a transcendent spectacle, which never fails to bring to all eyes the sad, unhidden tears.

The cast of "Oliver Twist" was as good as the splendid company could fornish, and was everything to be desired. There was not a particle of failure in any part. In some por tions of her performance, the power of Miss Western was truly marvelous. The scene in which she becomes the protectress of Oliver was noble, and the mysterious interview, in shadows of night, upon Loudon Bridge, with its self-reproaches, confessions, mournful and desponding forebodings, was an impersonation chaste, and grand, the audience testifying its

It is of fine the flame of the strong with the service of the strong with the strong over the shoulder and around the body as to most effectually serve the purpose of abdominal supporters. Thus, while it aids the soldier in more easily maintaining an upright position, it protects the most delicate and sensitive portion of the person from dampness and cold, from which nearly all the diseases incident to camp life originate. No soldier, officer or private, should be without one of these protectors of the health of the body. Its use in the present army in the course of a campaign would be worth tens of thousands of men. The Government should favor its widest use, and every officer should encourage all to wear it. On Sanday, the Sd, all the forces, including artitlery, left Washington under my command for Williamson. On the evening of the same day we encountered the enemy posted in a strong position at a small creek called Little Creek. I immediately ordered Col. Stevenson, commanding the second brigade, who was then in the advance, to make all haste in driving them from the opposite side of the creek, and push on at once. The engagement lasted one bour, when the enemy, being driven from their rific pits by the effective fire of Beiger's Rhode Island battery, retired to Rawls' Mills, one mile further on, where they made another stand in a recently constructed field work. Beiger's battery and two batteries of the Third New York artillery were immediately ordered into position, and, after a splendid engagement of half an hour, succeeded in driving the enemy from their works and across a bridge, which they burst.

their works and across burnt.

That night, while the pioneers rebuilt the burnt bridge, the forces bivouacked on the field, and proceeded the next morning to Williamston, where we arrived about noon. We started from there after a short rest in pursuit of the enemy, bivouacking about five miles from that place.

enemy, bivouscking about five miles from that place.

On the following day we reached and occupied the fortifications at Rainbow Banks, three miles below Hamilton, and thes pushed on to Hamilton. There we expected to find some iron-clad boats, said to be in the process of construction at Hamilton, but discovered nothing of the kind.

On the 6th we left Hamilton in pursuit of the enemy toward Tarboro', and encamped on the same night within ten miles of that place. It was my intention to pursue the enemy to Tarboro', but the exhausted condition of my mer, most of whom had been sick during the last two months, and had not yet recovered their strength, and the provisions being entirely exhausted, so that I had to subsist the command by foraging, as well as the fact that the enemy strength, and the provisions being entirely ex-hausted, so that I had to subsist the command by foraging, as well as the fact that the enemy were being largely reinforced by rail, changed my plans, and on the following morning, the 27th Instant, I countermarched the column reaching Hamilton the same night, where we remained until the next morning, when we marched for Williamston in the midst of a se-vere snow storm. At Williamston we remained a day, in order to give the men an opportunity to rest.

At daylight the next day (10th instant) we started for Plymouth, where we arrived that night. The following day the troops were all re-embarked at Newbern.

Daring the engagement at Rawl's Mills and Hamilton, we captured dive prisoners, who were paroled at Williamston. The loss on our side consisted of 6 killed and 8 wounded.

The expedition was instrumental in saving the town and forces at Plymouth from destruction and capture, as I found, upon my arrival at the place, that the enemy's forces, while lying in the vicinity, besides being engaged in foraging, had reconstructed a bridge over the creek, three miles outside of the town, for the transportation of their artillery to the opposite bank. I also learned, from information gathered on the spot, that an immediate attack was to have been made on the place; but upon hearing of my advance from Washington, and seeing the danger of their capture, they beat a precipitate and hasty retreat.
